RONALD COASE TO SPEAK AT USD MARCH 11

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Professor Ronald H. Coase of the University of Chicago Law School will lecture March 11 at the University of San Diego at 8 p.m. in Salomon Lecture Hall, De Sales Hall. Coase will show the film "Adam Smith and the Wealth of Nations," followed by a discussion of the film.

The film has been shown in the British House of Commons. Coase is editor of the Journal of Law and Economics, and is creator of the Coase Theorem, which has been the subject of study and consideration in many law and economics programs.

Coase was born in London, England, where he attended the London School of Economics. After holding positions at the Dundee School of Economics and the University of Liverpool, he joined the faculty of the London School of Economics in 1935. In 1947 he was appointed Reader in Economics with special reference to Public Utilities there, and in 1951 he came to the United States.

He has taught at the Universities of Buffalo, Virginia and Chicago in this country, and is now Clifton R. Musser Professor of Economics in the University of Chicago Law School.

Coase's lecture is part of the Distinguished Speakers Series in Law and Economics sponsored by the University of San Diego School of Law on Thursday evenings through April.
